Dear Doris:

Although I've taken a long time to tell you, I'm pleased to have your letter of September 12. I was on vacation when it arrived, and then to London on business for 10 days. Meanwhile your good letter settled itself right to the bottom of accumulated work.

We all regret, as you do, the loss of valued employees occasioned by the financial problems of the Johns Hopkins University, which, of course, are like those of most universities in the U.S. today.

However, things are already beginning to look up just a little at the Johns Hopkins Press. We are anxious to restore the strength and program we had developed in the humanities. It's my guess this will be possible within a year or two. I hope it will be in good time to attract the companion book of Gabriela Mistral's Selected Prose also to Hopkins.

Sincerely yours,

Harold E. Ingle
Director
